STALLO COUNSEL SCORES GEN. IVES BEFORE SURROGATE

Metropolitan Trust and President Accused of Fraud in Handling Estate.

DEMANDS JURY TRIAL.

Court Refuses to Let Trust Company Sue Itself to Test Own Honesty.

Gen. Brayton Ives, former president of the Metropolitan Trust Company, was scored by counsel for Laura McDonald Stallo, granddaughter of the late Standard Oil millionaire, Alexander McDonald, whom the heiress's application for the removal of the trust company as administrator of her grandfather's estate came up before Surrogate Cohalan today. The lawyer, Nash Rockwood, denounced the handling of the McDonald estate as a history of bad faith, fraud and indefensible dishonesty.

"This is an action for conversion," shouted Mr. Rockwood, opposing a motion of the Metropolitan Trust Company, John D. Milburn, that would mean further delay, "involving an illegal and fraudulent conspiracy to deprive these young women of the securities. The action should be tried before a jury on a charge of fraud, conspiracy and conversion."

"It is not a question of an accounting. We cannot agree to a single statement made on behalf of the trust company; we cannot agree that Ives ever acted bona fide or that he was ever anything but a grasping crook, participating in a conspiracy and seeking to get all he could from these young girls. A spade must be called a spade."

The petition of Miss Stallo charges that she and her sister, who was recently married to Prince Michel Charles Aimé Joseph Napoleon Murat, have lost more than $2,000,000 through the mismanagement of the estate, to which they were the sole heirs, being the only next of kin of McDonald, who died intestate. It charges particularly that railroad securities given to the Metropolitan Trust Company as collateral for a note for $2,000,000 have been sold at much less than their real value. Attorney Milburn defended the sale of the securities. One block consisted of $2,000 shares of Standard Oil Company and this was sold shortly after the dissolution of the monopoly was ordered by the United States Supreme Court, as it was deemed unwise to hold it longer. He denied that it had been sold at private sale and before the renewal time of the note arrived.

During Mr. Milburn's argument it came out that Gen. Ives now has a section of another block of stock, part of the McDonald note collateral. Ives claims that the stock is his, said Mr. Milburn, and that whether this is so can only be determined by a suit brought by the trust company.

Surrogate Cohalan declared that some disinterested body should bring the suit. "I cannot conceive of the Metropolitan Trust Company prosecuting the action honestly," he said. "I can't conceive how a Metropolitan Company can continue as administrator under the circumstances, and I won't be a party to such a thing."

The Surrogate gave Mr. Milburn until July 8 to file affidavits.

POLO GROUNDS, June 27.—With only one game to fight out this afternoon, the affair between the Braves and the Giants seems like a half holiday. The crowd also took it that way apparently, and not more than six thousand of the faithful came out to witness the festivities. James Gaffney, to further convince us that he is neither sick or dying, occupied a box next to the Boston bench. The weather was intensely hot and coats were shed profusely. Jeff Tresau took up the pitching burden for the Giants and expressed

FIVE DEAD ON BURNING SHIP IN BAY

Seven Badly Injured When Standard Oil Steamer Mohawk Explodes.

CREW PENNED BY BLAZE.

Breeches Buoy Rigged From Tugs to Rescue From Burning Hulk.

Five men were killed and seven were injured when thousands of gallons of oil exploded in the tank steamer Mohawk, lying off Tompkinsville, Staten Island, late this afternoon. The vessel is under charter of the Standard Oil Company and is one of the great fleet of "tankers" that carry the trust's product to all parts of the world.

Observers on shore heard a rumbling sound. The rear hatches of the tank steamer, which was apparently fully laden with oil, flew a hundred feet into the air, as though from some terrific explosion, and flames and dense smoke poured up from the hatches and companion ways.

A city fire boat, the Merritt-Chapman Wrecking Company's wrecking tug, "The Wrecker," and a small fleet of tugs stood by, the tugs abandoning their tugs to put out at full speed for the blazing steamer.

The Mohawk apparently carried a crew of 40 to 50 men, who seemed to be making a desperate, but ineffectual attempt to fight the flames. The oil fed fire, however, soon raked the ship from stem to stern, sending up immense volumes of acrid smoke.

Within half an hour after the explosion first shook the Mohawk, her crew had been driven forward until they were huddled in the very bow of the boat, unable to lower their own boats.

To those on shore it seemed for a time that all the men on the Mohawk were doomed to death, either from fire or explosion, and hurry calls were sent to all hospitals on Staten Island, many ambulances and physicians being summoned. They lined up on shore and rigged up an emergency hospital.

Then quite by accident M. Varese, the fat journalist in the arm, jabbed the fat journalist in the arm. The blood squirted and Varese picked up his coat, quite scared and prepared for flight. Miss Kane, who was really fond of Varese, rushed forward and caught hold of the bleeding arm. The wounded man, looked into her eyes and began to cry.

Those tears shattered all the romance in the heart of the fair actress. She dropped the wounded arm, and she and Mrs. Harden fled from the woods. Often the journalist called after that, but never again did he see his innamorata. She was always "out."

AMERICAN ACTRESS FOR WHOM RIVAL LOVERS FOUGHT DUEL.

The Curandiera MacRorie arrived to-day from Southampton, she made the long southern journey, and despite head winds and fog, landed at the Light Ship in four days, 25 hours and 45 minutes.

Gail Kane, an actress, and Mrs. P. L. Harden, wife of a New York publisher, were among the passengers. In Paris the two women were inseparable. Mrs. Harden told a story on her friend. The actress, it seemed, had a host of admirers. The two most favored were a short and fat journalist, named Jacques Ledoux, and Henri Varese, a neat and proper gentleman of leisure and means.

One day the journalist was leaving after a call when he bumped into the rival just coming in. Blood could alone atone for the bump. Cards were exchanged. Coffee, rapiers, seconds and doctors were arranged for. Miss Kane was excited.

"Aren't you going to try and prevent the duel?" exclaimed her friend. "No," responded the American girl; "let them fight."

What was more, the two women went to see the duel, which was pulled off in the gray of the dawn. From the first flash of the rapiers it looked to the girls like a fake. The men were evidently afraid of each other. The girls too heard in their hiding place.

Then quite by accident M. Varese, the fat journalist in the arm, jabbed the fat journalist in the arm. The blood squirted and Varese picked up his coat, quite scared and prepared for flight. Miss Kane, who was really fond of Varese, rushed forward and caught hold of the bleeding arm. The wounded man, looked into her eyes and began to cry.

Those tears shattered all the romance in the heart of the fair actress. She dropped the wounded arm, and she and Mrs. Harden fled from the woods. Often the journalist called after that, but never again did he see his innamorata. She was always "out."

PASTOR ON STAND ADMITS HE ASKED GIRL FOR A KISS

"But It Was a Silly Thing to Do," Says MacRorie at Hearing.

NEVER WRONGED GIRL.

Jersey Clergyman Says He Was Dazed When He Signed Confession.

Rev. Willis S. MacRorie, pastor of the little Mountain Methodist Episcopal Church at Martinsville, N. J., to-day took the stand in his own defense in the trial before Judge Connolly and a jury at Elizabeth, N. J., on the charge of misconduct with nineteen-year-old Edith Nelson, formerly a member of his choir.

After a long debate counsel for the defense decided to take a chance and send MacRorie to the stand. There was a quick stir of interest in the packed courtroom as the curly-haired minister stepped briskly forward.

Attorney Gebhardt first asked the minister his age, thirty-seven years, and occupation and then drew an emphatic denial of the charge. The defense proceeded to try to build up a complete alibi for every hour of Nov. 18, the last date specified in the indictment as the day on which MacRorie misbehaved with the girl.

PASTOR REMEMBERED EVERY MINUTE OF THE DAY.
MacRorie, with a glib memory for every detail of that day's happenings, described his complete routine from the time he arose early in the morning until he retired with his wife that night. As related by him, there was no moment left undescribed during which he and the girl could have met unobserved. Attorney Gebhardt then read the confession of misbehavior with the girl. MacRorie identified the signature, but declared he had no recollection of signing a document containing such assertions.

"How did you come to sign this document?" asked Gebhardt. "My only explanation is this," said MacRorie. "It may sound silly to others, but it is not silly to me. I was confronted with the statement that the girl had signed a sworn accusation against me. My whole career, my life's work, my wife and family were at stake. I was overwhelmed and crushed by the accusation. I did not know which way to turn."

"Some one laid a paper in front of me and urged me to sign it. I was in a daze. My mind would not work. I was paralyzed with the horror of it all. I had given my life to my profession, and here I stood, an innocent man, apparently branded by the false statements of a girl I did not know what I was doing or what I was signing my name to."

PROSECUTOR BEGINS A MERCILESS GRILLING.
MacRorie was then turned over to Prosecutor Stein, who prepared almost joyfully for a long, grilling cross-examination. The young minister stood his ground well, but the ordeal brought new life into his thin, sharp face and kept him incessantly mopping his brow.

MacRorie was questioned about his letters to the girl, the one particularly in which he asked her to "Meet me at Beekman's Woods and we will have a big time."

WOMAN NURSE SLAIN, COUSIN KILLS HERSELF IN HOSPITAL MYSTERY

VICTIM WAKES TO FLEE, IS SHOT THROUGH HEART

Rosalie Roque Turns Automatic Revolver on Herself and Falls Dead Over Miss Lacey's Body.

The non-appearance for duty to-day of Rosalie Roque and Catherine Lacey, nurses in the Montefiore Home for Chronic Invalids at Bedford Hills, Westchester County, led to an investigation which disclosed that both women were dead in Miss Lacey's room, over the laundry in a wing of the main hospital building. An inquest held by Coroner Mason at Peekskill established that Miss Roque went from her own room to Miss Lacey's room, across the hall, early last night, shot and killed Miss Lacey and then shot herself. The women were French Canadians from Oswego, N. Y., and are said to have been cousins.

PHILADELPHIA, June 27.—Enthusiasm over their double victory here yesterday.

MURDER APPEARS TO HAVE BEEN DELIBERATE.
From the testimony taken at the inquest and the circumstances attending the tragedy it appears that the murder was deliberately planned. The revolver used by Miss Roque was new and of the readily automatic pattern. A box of cartridges was found in her trunk. The position of Miss Lacey's body indicates that she was shot while trying to escape from the room. Miss Lacey was employed in the Bedford Hills Montefiore Home, which cared for tubercular patients, on Montefiore. She was sent to the hospital for the employment bureau of Charles O'Connor, 17th and Eleventh street and Fifth avenue, this city. Her company was soon established and she made head day, nurse on the male side, a position she held until her death. When she had been at work three weeks she asked that her cousin, Rosalie Roque, be employed. Dr. L. Rosenberg, the superintendent, agreed to give a position to Miss Roque, who had a nurse's certificate, and she became a night nurse in the hospital. Hospital employees told the Coroner today that Miss Roque appeared to exercise a dominating influence over Miss Lacey. The latter would not do anything without the approval of her cousin. The two young women kept to themselves and were known as the "mystery nurses." They had adjoining rooms in a section of the laundry wing devoted to the use of the nurses. About three weeks ago there arose a bitter disagreement between Miss Roque and Miss Lacey. On one occasion Miss Roque slapped Miss Lacey's face. The medical staff did not interfere because the cousins had not invited confidence and their work as nurses was not interfered with by their personal disagreements. KILLED AS SHE TRIED TO FLEE FROM ROOM.
Both young women went to their rooms after dinner last night. Miss Lacey was off for the day and Miss Roque was to go on duty until midnight. When they reached their rooms they were alone on the second floor. Everything was in the hospital was on the lower floor. It is believed from the evidence that the murder was deliberate.
